Estate Executor(s)

Choosing Your Estate Executor

Choosing an Estate Executor is a critical part of preparing your Will. Not only is your Estate Executor responsible for all aspects of settling your estate – a process which can take up to two years or longer to resolve – but they can also be held personally liable for any errors that they make during the settling process.

Use the following Executor Selection Checklist to help you in choosing the right person:

They Have the Competence to Perform the Task well

You'll want to choose someone who is:

- a person who is trusted and smart
- savvy enough to deal with accountants, financial and legal advisors and to understand the information that they receive
- not easily overwhelmed, willing to ask tough questions and can manage money.

They Have the Time to Take on the Role

Make sure the person you choose has the time to do the work properly.

It can be physically demanding and mentally draining, not to mention the time it consumes.

Being an executor is basically equivalent to a part-time job that can take up to two years or more to complete.

They are Strong and Stable in Emotional Situations

It's essential not to underestimate the emotional element involved when a loved one passes away.

This is especially important if you choose a spouse or child as your Executor.

You must consider your loved one's objectivity and their ability to deal with issues rationally.

Family dynamics may simmer while parents are alive, but they can intensify when the first parent passes on.

They Are Not a Beneficiary of Your Estate

Some legal and financial professionals now deter Canadians from choosing their children as their Executors.

This is because in most cases children are also listed as beneficiaries.

While your children may seem like the most logical choice for your Executor(s), consider that you may be pitting them against each other during decision making and creating potential roadblocks for resolution.

You Can Trust Them to Be Objective

The modern family dynamic is more varied and blended than ever before, and that has made estate planning more complicated.

Selecting a person who can remain objective gets more difficult as relationships get more complex, for example stepchildren can add to potential disputes among siblings.

They Live Within a Manageable Distance

Appointing a non-resident to be your Executor can lead to negative consequences.

Consider a Co Executor to assist your Executor and an Alternate Executor to step in if one of your Executors' is not available.
